INTRODUCTION

The rules of the Senate charge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with jurisdiction over all civil transportation—land, air, and sea.

Being a member of this committee and the subcommittee thereof on Maritime Matters, a number of interesting details have come to my attention. The fact that there did not exist a ledger sheet showing the construction costs, selling (disposal) price, and the purchasers of surplus vessels astounded me.

Through the complete cooperation of the committee's chairman (Hon. Ed. Johnson, Colorado) and his appreciation of factual information, there is contained herein a compilation of indisputable evidence in connection with our war-time shipbuilding and postwar disposal programs.

This information was compiled by the Maritime Administration from the official files of the old Maritime Commission.

The contents of this report reveal for the first time the immensity of our ship-disposal program, both foreign and domestic. It also reveals how little we received for a commodity of lasting value.

In the disposal of our reserve fleet, only the best ships were marketed. We are left with the obsolete Liberty-type ships and the junk requisitioned under the pressure of war. Our tankers, Victorys, C–4 cargoes, and the other desirable ships are gone, many of which have been sold to foreign nations and which are beyond our power to requisition in an emergency.

It would be foolish to indiscreetly accuse the purchasers of surplus ships of defrauding the Government. Congress, in passing the Ship Sales Act of 1946 (Public Law 321, 79th Cong., 2d sess.), created a statutory formula for arriving at the price in ship sales. Later, in the Eighty-first Congress (Public Law 591, 2d sess.), there was authorized the sale of C–4 cargo ships for Great Lakes carriage. Ships disposed of under this legislation by the old Commission and the new Administration were sold according to the dictates of Congress.

The fact that Congress may have been unwise in passing such bargain-rate legislation is a matter that we must evaluate. A legal, moral, and ethical business deal with the Government by an individual is not to be frowned upon. If Congress, in the passage of such laws, has been unwittingly wrong, then it is time for it to become more thoroughly acquainted with the facts.

To my colleagues and others interested in a documentation of ship sales (1,500 tons and over), may I respectfully refer you to the following listings which give pertinent information on each vessel disposed of.

JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
Senator, Delaware.
